What Are Allergies?

Allergies refer to the immune system's overreaction to certain harmless substances, known as allergens. This hypersensitive response is also called an allergic reaction. When exposed to allergens such as dust mites, pollen, animal dander, or certain foods, the immune system mistakenly identifies these as threats and triggers an allergic response, resulting in various symptoms.

Common allergy symptoms

Allergic Rhinitis
Frequent sneezing, nasal congestion, runny nose, and itching sensations in the nose or eyes.

Skin Allergies (Eczema)
Dry, red, itchy skin, which may lead to flaking or swelling.

Asthma
Difficulty breathing, wheezing, and persistent coughing, particularly after physical activity or exposure to allergens.

Our Services

We provide a comprehensive range of pediatric respiratory and allergy treatments, including:

- Diagnosis and management of asthma and chronic respiratory conditions to help control symptoms and prevent exacerbations.
- Treatment of infectious diseases such as bronchitis and pneumonia caused by viruses or bacteria.
- Comprehensive evaluation and investigation of chronic cough, wheezing, and breathing difficulties.
- Diagnosis and management of allergic rhinitis and other respiratory allergies, providing symptom relief for sneezing, nasal congestion, and runny nose.

Why Is Treatment Necessary?

Uncontrolled allergies can significantly impact quality of life, posing higher health risks, especially for children. Allergic discomforts may interfere with their learning performance, sleep quality, and emotional well-being. Early diagnosis and treatment are crucial for effectively improving a patient's quality of life and ability to carry out daily activities.
